

Resources and support available from VOICE

While these efforts respond to the immediate threats raised by COVID-19, they also lay the groundwork for longer-term organizing among girl- and women-led organizations working in crisis settings.

Resource navigators and info hub

VOICE Resource Navigators operate a Global Info Hub and host weekly virtual technical support sessions—accessible across age, language, ability, and culture—to disseminate new information and resources on addressing COVID-19 and violence against girls and women.

Network development and coordination

VOICE is operating as a global convener, connecting girl- and women-led organizations to build solidarity and facilitate sharing of learning and strategies in countries likely to be heavily impacted by COVID-19. In a rapidly changing environment, VOICE is coordinating among groups to quickly identify emerging areas of need, promising opportunities, and risks.

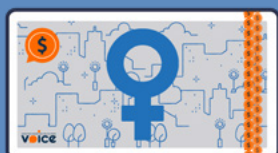

Research

VOICE is partnering with girl- and women-led organizations to conduct research on how best to support them, and is analyzing a range of sources—including social media—to understand how COVID-19 is impacting this community. With these findings, VOICE will work to ensure that decision-makers for the COVID-19 response base their plans not on assumptions about girls and women, but on their direct feedback.

Communications

VOICE is working with women photographers, journalists, and videographers living and working in affected communities to bring the stories of girls and women impacted by COVID-19 directly to the public.

Donor advocacy

VOICE is leveraging its relationships with major international donors to push for greater direct funding of girl- and women-led organizations responding to COVID-19. This includes acting as a connector to directly link funding organizations with local girls' and women's groups.
